The world we live in undergoes vast global and social changes! Emerging new challenges and needs, such as the integration of refugees and immigrants, debates on human rights, and gender-related power struggles all call for creative alternative practices and frameworks that allow personal and collective narratives to enter our conversations, working-, learning- and living spaces! Thus, it is our pleasure to invite you to a special Master Class directed at trainers, facilitators, peace-, development- and aid workers and gender educators to re-think culture, gender, race, sexual orientation and social class with a deep awareness towards identity politics, language as identity, ideology and more across disagreements and conflicts.

Robert Nagel authors a new working paper with Women, peace and Security at LSE - The Known Knowns and Known Unknowns in data on Women, Peace and Security

What do we know about gender, women, peace and security? In the past two decades, interest in systematic data and research on gender, women, peace and security has increased substantially. This growth has helped bring traditional feminist research themes into the mainstream fold of political science and international relations, offering opportunities to analyse and answer a number of policy-relevant questions...
