

Submit your work to the next issue of the Research and Practice Quarterly Roundup

The Research and Practice Quarterly Roundup provides an outlet for members to share their work and experiences. We hope this not only raises the profile of members' work but foments collaboration in cross-cutting areas of interest as well.

The roundup will be issued every March, June, September and December. Those wishing to contribute should follow the below instructions, which apply to academics and practitioners. Submissions and any questions should be directed to Phillip Nelson. The deadline for submissions to the September Roundup is Friday, 4 September.

Submissions are divided into two categories - 'research publications' and the 'practice of intervention, research and policy'. The first refers to any new theoretical or empirical academic study published within the last 3 months. The latter refers to publications, blogs, or other reports that may include pieces on research methods, and opinion pieces on the process of fieldwork, as well as project evaluations, etc.

Members should send a 200-word summary of the item, plus title and contact email for any responses. A link to an online resource is highly recommended.

COVID-19 and Conflict

The tragedy of vaccine nationalism - Foreign Affairs

"Absent an international, enforceable commitment to distribute vaccines globally in an equitable and rational way, leaders will instead prioritize taking care of their own populations over slowing the spread of COVID-19 elsewhere or helping protect essential health-care workers and highly vulnerable populations in other countries... It is not too late for global cooperation to prevail over global dysfunction, but it will require states and their political leaders to change course." Read more.

"Waging war" against "a little flu" – Masculinities & COVID-19 - Discussion hosted by The Gender, Justice and Security Hub

As the corona virus pandemic continues to escalate around the globe, the expression of masculinities in responding to the crisis demands attention. From 'waging war' against the virus on the 'frontlines' to one state leader referring to COVID-19 as 'a little flu', to prioritising re-opening the economy over protecting lives, these responses have affected the social, economic and health services that communities need and receive. ## Covid-19 kills scores of health workers in war-torn Yemen - The Guardian

"At least 97 Yemeni healthcare workers have died from Covid-19 as the disease ravages the war-torn country, according to a report that gives an insight into the true scale of Yemen's poorly documented outbreak.

Yemen, already suffering from a five-year war that has caused the world's worst humanitarian crisis, has proved uniquely vulnerable to the coronavirus pandemic, according to data published by the medical charity MedGlobal on Thursday..." continue reading.

Peacebuilder's perspective on the pandemic - Skoll Foundation

Jess Murrey, advisor at Search for Common Ground (2006 Skoll Awardee), recently spoke with two peacebuilders, Shoqi Al-Maktary from Yemen and Ehsanullah Abrar in Afghanistan, to learn how countries torn by years of armed conflict are coping with COVID-19 while continuing to build the path forward for peace.
